Areas of mentorship:

“I love to teach and help others progress in their art journey. I approach every student from their current position on their journey; I seek to find their individual style and desired direction to help them move forward. I never ask that they paint like me; I do not teach “tricks”; I inform students on the basics of classical methods that allow them to mature and grow into better and better artists in their chosen style, medium and development desires.

I teach classical methods of oil and pastel painting that include composition, drawing, paint application, perspective, and most of all color theory (value, temperature, atmospheric perspective, and edges). My critique methods are always positive.”

Ginger hosts monthly group art gatherings in her teaching studio in her home in Castle Pines Village, Colorado at no charge.
